"It's not about money. It's not about fame. It's that quiet bump that you feel on the tip of your rod, when no one's around. It's about everything inside you that screams predator. And to us, what's exciting is, hearing about how the actions and quality of our rods, are what people keep raving about. Oh yeah, they also rave about the price."

William Walton Grigg started the W.W. Grigg Company in 1953 as a manufactures rep agency. In 1960 Wally (W.W.) started manufacturing his own products for distribution to retailers. Over the years, he has passed the business on to his sons and it is now run by David Grigg and his wife Krista. In 2006 W.W. Grigg relocated to Canby, Oregon to it's newly built distribution center.

At present, they still make rods in the tradition of Wally. Using the best quality components and offering the best prices in the industry. That was the goal in the beginning and it still remains today.
